Vice Mayor Gwen Wisler (DEM) also seeks reelection. She first ran as a business-savvy candidate and has in her first term lived up to expectations as a number-cruncher. It is she who usually gets stuck in the uncomfortable position of challenging flawed proposals; she led the recent interrogation of city staff over the RADTIP's 50-percent overruns. A stickler for the rule of law, she has, on more than one occasion, cast the lone vote against proposals that would grant special privileges to certain groups or organizations. Wisler was president or CEO of a number of mid-size corporations before starting Asheville Profits, LLC, a consultancy which bills clients in the currency of community service. Big issues for Wisler include transportation, housing, and sustainability. One reason for running again, she says, is to assure accountability with the recent bond issues.
